THE BEAT OF THE YEAR COSTS BUT A TRIFLE TO CURE CATARRH

By Robert Livingston Beecher.

(Copyright, 1909, by the Pearson Publishing Co.)

Bruce looked at the writing for a moment. Then, while the janitress's back was turned, he slipped the photograph into his pocket.

On the front stoop, Bruce thanked the woman for her assistance, and looked at his watch. It was five o'clock. He jumped into a passing trolley car and, ten minutes later, entered the lively stable of O'Brien & Doran.

The place was swarming with reporters; but, much to Bruce's relief, Connors was not among them. In fact, he only knew they were newspaper men by instinct. He did not remember to have seen any of them before.

As he entered, he found the center of the stable occupied by Michael McGinnis, the head stableman. The latter, indeed, was in none too good humor and, as Bruce approached, McGinnis turned a scowling red face upon him.

"See here, young bucko," he burst out, his red hair bristling with indignation. "Don't yer begin asking me the history of me life. I niver seen the young feller before; I niver expect to clap eyes on him agin; he didn't leave any mews in the wagon, and that's all. Yours truly, Mike McGinnis."

Bruce saw that his fiery friend would need fiery treatment.

"I didn't come to pester you with questions, Mr. McGinnis," he began, soothingly. "You've summed up the case completely yourself." Bruce was aware that several of the strange reporters had strolled up behind him and were now well within earshot. "All I want," he continued, with a wink at the brawny Irishman, "is a runabout for an hour or so and someone to drive me around. I'm in the real-estate business in Chicago, and I don't know the lay of the land out here worth a cent."

Bruce knew instinctively that the reporters behind him were exchanging dubious glances.

"Well," said McGinnis, slowly, with a puzzled expression, "I'll let yer have a runabout and a good, reliable man at the usual rates, two dollars an hour. Here, Jawn, hitch up the green runabout and show our frind the sights of the town."

Bruce frowned at the disappearing "Jawn," who was already among the stalls, and then turned again to McGinnis.

"I want a better, more intelligent man than that, Mr. McGinnis," he remarked. "Someone about your stamp. Can't you give me an hour or so of your time?"

McGinnis saw another wink slowly materialize out of nothing and vanish again. Then the puzzled expression on his own face gradually faded away also.

"My time's valuable, young feller," he said, meaningly.

The young man smiled. "I am accustomed to paying well for the assistance of valuable men," he said, with an important air. "What is your figure?"

McGinnis took off his hat and scratched his head.

"Well," he said at last, "I think about five dollars an hour will hit it about right."

"You're on," said Bruce, briskly. As he turned away, he caught some disjointed fragments of whispered conversation behind him.

"He is, I tell you. I saw him when I was on that kidnapping case."

"Well, what shall—"

Bruce walked over from the doorway and stepped into the green runabout. McGinnis swung up beside him, and they rolled down the street.

"What's your paper, lad?" McGinnis asked, his eyes dancing.

Bruce told him.

At half-past five the green runabout drew up at the button factory in Long Island City and Bruce and McGinnis were ushered into the superintendent's office. Bruce briefly explained the identity of his companion and then pointed to the large photograph on the wall.

"See if you see our frind there, McGinnis," said he.

The Irishman stepped up to the picture, looked at it for a moment, and then laid a big thumb on the figure of a man at the left end of the front row.

"That's him," he said, with an air of complete conviction. "That's his mustache all right."

The superintendent looked at the man indicated and whistled. Then he reversed the frame and glanced at the key on the back.

"Yes, I thought so," he said. He adjusted the picture in its proper position and studied the group again. Then he turned and faced the two excited men before him.

"Did you find Joyce?" he asked abruptly.

"No," replied Bruce. "I didn't. He left his flat-house at seven o'clock last night and hasn't been seen since."

The superintendent stroked his iron gray beard.

"It doesn't necessarily prove anything," he said, at last. "The fact that that man whom Mr. McGinnis has just pointed out—the fact that he hired a rig last night doesn't necessarily connect him in any way with that body, does it now?"

Bruce shook his head.

"And yet," added the speaker. "What?" broke in Bruce.

"There's one curious thing about that group," continued the superintendent.

Bruce and McGinnis stared hard at the photograph and then looked inquiringly at the speaker.

"The curious thing, to my mind," said the superintendent, "is the position of a certain girl in that big group of more than three hundred people. Look at that photograph again, and you'll notice that there are about twenty men off in that left corner. There's only one girl among them and she's standing out on the extreme end—next to Mr. McGinnis's man and between him and Joyce. And Joyce is missing."

How many readers of The Republic know that in Inland Australia where the mightiest of eucalyptus trees grow in abundance, that there is no consumption, catarrh or diseases of the respiratory tract?

The refreshing balsam thrown out by these trees fills the air and is breathed into the lungs by the inhabitants and all germ life is destroyed.

If you have catarrh you cannot go to Inland Australia except at great expense, but you can breathe right in your own home the same pleasant, soothing, healing, germ killing air you would breathe if you were living in the eucalyptus district of Australia.

Just breathe HYOMEL. It is made from Australian eucalyptus and scientifically combined with thymol and other antiseptics employed in the Listerian system.

Pour a few drops of HYOMEL in the inhaler and breathe it. As it passes over the catarrh infected membrane it kills the germs and heals the raw, inflamed surface.

HYOMEL is guaranteed to cure catarrh, coughs, colds, croup and sore throat, or money back. Complete outfit including inhaler $1.00. Extra bottles of HYOMEL cost but 50 cents. Sold by the Lovett Drug Co. and druggists everywhere.

CHILD'S HAIR RIBBONS.

In the selection of hair ribbons for the little girl, instead of always matching the gown, why not pay some attention to the shade of the child's hair? The light haired little girl always looks her best with a hair ribbon of broad black satin or of black velvet. The deep black hair is always set off by scarlet ribbon, although there are shades of blue which are very attractive on black hair. The light blue in a soft satin ribbon is always pretty for the child with golden hair, while certain shades of brown hair look best when tied with a ribbon of the same shade.

BACKACHE, RHEUMATISM, SLEEP-LESSNESS.

Result from disordered kidneys. Foley Kidney Pills have helped others, they will help you. Mrs. J. B. Miller, Syracuse, N. Y., says: "For a long time I suffered with kidney trouble and rheumatism. I had severe backaches and felt all played out. After taking a bottle of Foley Kidney Pills my backache is gone and where I used to lay awake with rheumatic pains I now sleep in comfort. Foley Kidney Pills did wonderful things for Elvey & Hulett."

FRESH AIR.

Fresh air and exercise are necessary for good health. The average housewife gets plenty of exercise, but many women do not seem to regard fresh air as much of a necessity. The house should not only be well aired, but the housekeeper should not neglect good breathing exercises, for deep breathing stimulates the heart action and circulation.

FOOD COOLER.

Here is one simple home-made device that may help you during the fall, winter and spring. Take a simple box, such as one gets at the grocery, line it on the outside with tar paper or oilcloth to turn the rain and snow and on the inside with heavy brown paper and then with an old blanket to prevent freezing except in severe weather. Fasten it on the outside sill—on the east or south if you have such a window in your kitchen.
